Automating things A new way of editing images is to use the program's automation tools. These tools are based on conditions —everything from exposure settings to layer positioning. When you create a condition, it triggers another one when that condition is met or satisfies a certain criteria. Say, for example, that you wanted to resize all images to 200 pixels wide. You could create a rule that automatically resizes all images when the image size is less than 200 pixels wide. You could also use a rule to always apply some preset basic edits to a photo. For example, you could always apply a red-eye reduction filter or increase the brightness of a photo. The use of automation tools and settings can seem overwhelming to a beginning user. After all, many different settings and options are covered in the tutorials that come with the software. You will probably get the hang of it in a couple of hours, but again, the best way to learn is to use the tutorials. Practice makes perfect. ## Getting Started with Photoshop The real place to get started with Photoshop is in the patients having suffered from thyroglossal cysts. Clinical and epidemiological presentation and diagnostic and therapeutic aspects are discussed. Surgical excision was performed in 57 patients, with the addition of subtotal thyroidectomy in 6 cases. No surgical morbidity or mortality was encountered. The histological nature of the defect was hyperplastic in 30 patients and normo-plastic in 27. Histological examination of the specimen was negative in the remaining 5 cases. Results of treatment are discussed. Possible involvement of prolyl hydroxylase in the production of N-(2,3-dihydroxypropyl)arginine in rabbit aortic media. This study has been designed to determine whether the steady-state level of arginine-proline metabolism in vascular tissue is regulated by a mechanism involving the synthesis of N-(2,3-dihydroxypropyl)arginine, the potential end product of a specific hydroxylation of a specific arginine residue in the peptide chain of collagen. The levels of N-(2,3-dihydroxypropyl)arginine and arginine have been compared in vascular tissue and extravascular tissue. N-(2,3-Dihydroxypropyl)argini ne was found to be present at a significantly higher concentration in vascular tissue (28.0 +/- 2.0 nmol/mg) than in extravascular tissue (5.2 +/- 1.2 nmol/mg; mean +/- S.E.). In vitro incorporation of [¹⁴C]arginine into collagen from the media of cultured aortic endothelial cells (EC) showed significantly increased formation of radioactivity in the N-(2,3-dihydroxypropyl) arginine fraction, compared to its non-hydroxylated analog. In rabbit aortic media, the levels of N-(2,3-dihydroxypropyl)arginine were higher in the upper layers of the media, closest to the endothelial cells, than in the lower layers of the media. These results indicate a possible role for hydroxylation of arginine in the metabolism of extracellular matrix in vascular tissue. Mourad
